YESTERDAY'S SESSION.

Yesterday, about 10 o'clock, Justice A. Caton, of the Supreme Court, Hon. Thomas Lyle Dickey, Hon. Pinckney H. Walker, Justice of the Appellate Court, a majority of the members of the New Supreme Court, came into the Court-room. Its chief,

REMARKS OF MR. GALLUP.

May it Please Your Honors:

Upon the opening of a term of the Supreme Court of this State, it has been the custom for the Chicago bar, now confined to a portion of the Second District, to welcome the Judges who have been elected to preside over the deliberations of the court, and to express the sentiments and feelings of the profession with regard to the high character of the tribunal. In performing this service, I do not flatter myself that I can express, on behalf of the profession, more than an humble echo of the sentiments which are uttered in the halls of legislation, and in the higher courts of the land. Nor do I suppose that I can add to the lustre of the high character which the Judges of the Supreme Court have already acquired. But I am sure that I express the sentiments of the entire profession when I say that we have accepted the new tribunal, to which we are to be subject, with a feeling of confidence and respect. We have confidence in the integrity and ability of the Judges who have been selected to preside over it, and we have respect for the high office which they are to fill. Indeed, we have confidence that the Judges who have been selected will be found to be worthy successors of those who have preceded them. We have confidence that they will be found to be worthy successors of those who have preceded them. We have confidence that they will be found to be worthy successors of those who have preceded them. We have confidence that they
